I ran away from home and have been east about two years. Late in February, while in Washington, D. C., I met a man who proposed that we rob some post office. I con-sented, and together we went to Woodside, where we robbed the office by tearing out a glass and raising the window. He got in while watched. We secured $21 worth of stamps, which we took to Weshington and sold to a man on Pennsylvania avenue for $16. We divided the money, and I got a revolver also. tist centennial celebration opened at Richmond, Va., Saturday evening with a devotional meeting at the First Baptist Church, conducted by Rev. Dr. Broaddus, of Louisville. The movement for this centennial began some years ago in the Southern Baptist convention. The proposition was to commemorate the centennial of organized modern missions. Just one century ago William Carey sailed from England to India in company with one Thomas, and the Baptists throughout the world are endeavoring to raise special sums of money for missionary work, and to quicken the interest of the denomination in foreign missions. In the south, under the direction of the convention, it is sought to secure $250,000, to be used as a fund for chapels, Bible translation and similar work, and especially to enlarge the current operations of the foreign and home mission board.
